RISEING TRIES TO EXPLAIN.
But His Wife Doesn't Understand the Terms He Uses.

"I guess I'll go down into the country next week, Em'ly," said Mr. Rise-ing. "I need a vacation after this hot summer."

"Won't you be lonesome, John? I shall miss you awfully," said Mrs.
Rising.

"You can have your mother to stay with you, Em'ly. I'm going with a lot of men for chickens."

"How long will you be gone, John?"

"About a week, Em'ly. Bill Jones has the finest setter you ever saw," Mr.
Rising answered, with enthusiasm.

"Can you get many chickens in a week, John?"

"I should say so!" responded Mr.
Rising.

"You can't hurry the setter, can you?"

"We won't want to with this one, the trainer says—gets right down to work and keeps steadily at it without a break."

"Why, John, do they train setters?"

Mrs. Rising asked, with growing interest.

"Indeed they do, Em'ly—get 'em down time. We're going to take a pointer, too—hire it from the trainer."

"How do you use a pointer, John?"

was Mrs. Rising's next question as she saw the subject widening before her mental vision.

"Just use them to stir up the birds, Em'ly."

"But I thought the birds had to be kept quiet?"

"Oh, a pointer's still enough—just goes into the grass or stubble and finds the bird and then comes stock still at a point. That's warning enough for any man."

"Aren't chickens generally hatched in the summer, John?" Mrs. Rising resumed, with a patient endeavor to probe the subject through and through.

"Of course, Em'ly, in the early summer, and fed on grain until they are regular butter balls," said Mr. Rising smacked his lips in anticipatory enjoyment.

"It's strange I've never heard so much fuss made over chickens before."

"Well, your father never goes after chickens nor ducks, Em'ly, and this time last year there wasn't any Mrs.
Rising. But every September, Em'ly, the same crowd goes out in the grain stubble to hunt chickens," and Mr. Rise-ing smiled at his young wife with a mingled ecstasy of matrimonial and sporting bliss.

"Then, John, why do you take a setter?" said Mrs. Rising, returning to the charge.

"Well, this time Bill Jones has a daisy—a Llewellyn—white, marked with brown patches, and he's just crazy to show her off in the field," amiably explained Mr. Rising.

"But if you're all watching her in the field what fun is that?" demanded the now thoroughly aroused wife.

"A couple of us will use the pointer, and then somebody else may bring another setter," wearily replied Mr. Rise-ing.

"Who furnishes the eggs?" asked Mrs. Rising, resolved to see the matter through.

"Eggs—what eggs?" asked Mr. Rise-ing, bewildered in his turn.

"The eggs to set the setter, to get the chickens," slowly and distinctly explained Mrs. Rising.

Mr. Rising turned abruptly to look out of the nearest window, then in a voice choked with emotion he asked:

"Did you ever see a setter, Em'ly?"

"No, John," Mrs. Rising replied,
"you know I never lived in the country.
The hens I've seen have always been called good layers or good roasters and broilers."

"Mr. Rising took his hat in his hand and went to the door, and holding it open he said:

"Em'ly, if Bill Jones comes here with a dog, you ask him what kind of a dog it is."

Mrs. Rising nodded assent and then said to herself:

"Think of grown men hunting chickens and setting eggs—well, 'live and learn.'"—Chicago Times-Herald.

Large Family.
At a recent public celebration in a New England town, at which several state dignitaries were present, an old gentleman of rural aspect propounded many questions in a hoarse whisper to his nearest neighbor.

"Who's that sitting over there in the big chair?" he demanded.

"The governor," responded his neighbor laconically.

"And who are all those men gathered behind him?" persisted the old man.

"Suit," replied the other shortly.

"All of 'em?" gasped the old man.

"His neighbor nodded.

"Well, I swanny!" ejaculated the questioner after a moment's stunned astonishment. "We think we've got a pooty fair show o' Emmonses in this town, but if all those fellows are Sweetes, as near of an age as most of 'em look, I should like to see the rest of 'em family, that's all I've got to say! My stars!
What doin's they must have, come Thanksgivin and Christmas!"—Youth's Companion.

Unjust Aspersions on the Boy.
"Talk about intellectuals!" said Webb.
"That new office boy of mine has a head that would fill grandfather's hat."

"What's the matter now?" asked Bluffkins cautiously. "You were saying only last night that that boy was so careless you were afraid he might come to business some morning without his breakfast."

"I know it. That's just what I said.
But I mean to ask that boy's forgiveness. It was only this morning that I learned how unjust I had been. I gave the youngster several letters to mail.
He was gone some time, so when he came back I said, 'I'm afraid you didn't post those letters very promptly' and that your carelessness has made me miss the mail."

"Oh, no, sir," he replied. "I'm sure I didn't waste any time. In fact, I took care that the first letter I put in the box was the one marked 'Immediate!'"— Boston Budget.

Redfield was the first meteorologist to prove that in all extensive severe storms a system of surface winds is blowing in
